Phone Repairman Dies of Electrocution

A repairman for a communications company was electrocuted recently while fixing a damaged telephone pole in a Massachusetts community.

Steve Buckman, who had worked for Verizon for 25 years, was part of a crew fixing a pole that had been damaged in an earlier traffic accident.

He somehow came in contact with a power line.

The local fire department responded to a report of the worker receiving a shock. Buckman was transported to a local hospital, where he was pronounced dead.