Schoolbus Driver Safety – Evacuation Procedures Picture This

This image highlights a serious safety issue during a school bus evacuation. The children are exiting quickly through the emergency door, but the adult supervisor is distracted by a phone, failing to guide or assist them. Without clear direction, students risk falling, bumping into each other, or getting injured while jumping out. The backpacks on the ground add more hazards that could cause trips or sprains.

Proper evacuation procedures require the adult to stay focused, positioned to help students out one at a time, and ensure the area is clear. Regular drills should be supervised actively, with calm, organized movements and no distractions. When supervision breaks down during a critical moment, the safety of every child involved is immediately compromised.
