Employers must keep a record of work-connected injuries and diseases for a period of five years from the date of injury.

Other Employment Records

Municipal personnel records must be retained for 50 years after retirement or termination. Agencies that provide services to persons with developmental disabilities must keep personnel records, including background information relating to a staff person's qualifications for the position held, for a period of six years after that staff person's employment termination date. Does your state give employees a legal right to examine their own personnel files?

Employees' Rights

Employers are required to allow employees to inspect or copy their personnel files. Employers may charge a reasonable fee for copying. There are two exceptions: (1) if the employee is the subject of a pending investigation and disclosure of the information in the personnel file would prejudice law enforcement, and (2) if information relates to a government security investigation. If an employee disagrees with information in the file and employer and employee can't agree on removal or correction of the information, the employee may submit a written statement explaining his version, and the statement must be added to the record. Employee health, fitness, lifestyle, or other information obtained for the purposes of providing employees with a health risk assessment or other wellness program is not part of the employee's personnel records. Employers may charge a reasonable fee for copying.

Former Employees' Rights:

Same as for employees.

Covered Employers

Law applies to all employees except persons engaged in domestic service in the home of the employer, agricultural service, or temporary or seasonal employment in addition to employees of any social club, fraternal, charitable, educational, religious, scientific, or literary association, no part of the net earnings of which insures to the benefit of any private individual.
