Turning Safety Training into Proof of Due Diligence – Case Study

Northline Fabrication had policies, orientation records and safety meetings, but after a hand injury, leadership realized the proof of training was scattered and difficult to connect to specific hazards. The company was doing safety training, but it could not always show clearly what had been covered, who attended or what follow-up occurred.

This case study explains how SafetyNow ILT helped Northline build a stronger refresher training and documentation process. By connecting supervisor-led talks to high-risk manufacturing tasks, recent incidents and corrective actions, the company improved its ability to demonstrate due diligence to regulators, clients, insurers and internal leadership.
